Rare Books, Autographs and Prints

IT has been reported in Washington that the schedule covering old books in the Fordney Tariff Bill was placed there to protect the bookbinders, who asked for it.

The steady announcement of exhibitions and commemorative exercises in this country and Europe in recognition of the six hundredth anniversary of the poet Dante's death indicate that it will be the most generally and widely observed event of its kind in literary history.

The Walpole Galleries has continued book sales thruout the summer, but catalogs have been uniformly just too late for advance announcement in these columns. These midsummer sales, altho containing few rarities, have been very well attended and prices have been quite satisfactory.

Senator Lodge has been somewhat of a book collector in his day and dealers are depending upon this fact for his support of an amendment placing books twenty years old upon the free list. It is hard to believe that a book-lover would vote for the present schedule.

Several booksellers who had Hardy's "Desperate Remedies" on their want list of first editions when going abroad have returned without the desired volumes. This rarity in choice condition costs nearly as much as the remainder of Hardy's first editions and probably takes more time to find. In reply to an inquiry, an English dealer recently wrote: "I can furnish you a set of Hardy's first editions with the exception of 'Desperate Remedies' reasonably quick, but this volume is very hard to find in satisfactory condition and I would not like to make any definite promises in regard to it."

The general dullness of the present summer season has been the cause of considerable comment, but, after all, is it not a result of the return to normalcy? Before the war the book and print shops did very little business in the hot summer months. Most of the important collectors went abroad or to the sea shore or mountains and dealers had to await patiently for their return. The summers of 1919 and 1920 were extraordinary exceptions, and we are not likely to see them repeated very soon again.

Many stories have been told of strange finds in old books. The latest and not the least remarkable is the discovery of sixty-seven shares of stock in the Merchant's Bank of New York, now the Merchant's and Metals Bank, in an old copy of Spenser's "Færie Queene." These shares when issued ninety-eight years ago had a value of $14,000, and now with accrued dividends are said to be worth $6,000,000 if the decree of the lower court is sustained on appeal. The discovery of the bank shares and the tracing and fixing of the rightful owners was done by a New York genealogist.

The limited and expensive subscription edition, so common in this country twenty years ago, is making its appearance in England. Many of the wornout methods used here—the "strict" limit, the early numbers, probable oversubscription before publication, and similar arguments to clinch sales—are being worked with success. There are indications here, too, of the revival of the sales of subscription editions, but their success will depend very largely upon their real merit. We are still too close to many painful experiences to be moved by misrepresentations or misled by the old-fashioned subscription book-agent.

The English auction season which has come to an end was remarkable for the sustained interest thruout. Some of the most important sales were held in midsummer, and yet at all times prices were firm and frequently high, notwithstanding general business depression. "One of the strongest factors in the situation," writes an English dealer of large experience, "was the strong support of American collectors and the confidence of the English rare book trade in them." The English and American rare book markets have become practically one in the sense that there is a very clear mutual understanding and confidence, the result of which goes a long way in stabilizing values.

An event of importance for American scholarship is the acquisition by the University of Illinois of the Cavagna Library, one of the most important collections in Italy. After negotiations lasting several years, the library has reached Urbana, and will be arranged and cataloged as rapidly as possible. It contains some 70,000 volumes, besides several thousand maps, engravings, manuscript and historical documents. It is a general collection, formed during forty years by the late Count Antonio Cavagna Sangiuliana, at his estate of La Zelada, near Pavia. It is especially strong in history, both local and general; in the history of art, and in sets of periodicals and publications of learned societies in various languages.

The American Academy of Arts and Letters is planning a collection of literary and artistic Americana for their new building at 15 West Eighty-first Street, according to an announcement signed by William M. Sloane, president; Brander Matthews, chancellor, and Hamlin Garland, acting secretary. The Library and Archives Committee, with Hamlin Garland as chairman, has this feature in charge and invites correspondence with respect to gifts and loans of the following classes of subjects: 1: Full sets of books by members, autographed to the academy; 2. Manuscripts, architectural plans and other memorabilia of members; 3. Portraits of members, in oil if possible, together with characteristic sketches, photograph portraits and the like; 4. Paintings by members, sculpture and other works of art by members; 5. Collection of books concerning American writers, artists, architects and musicians.

The description of the unique copy of the "Pennsylvania Charter, Laws," etc., as described in the newspapers was not correct. The complete book consists of three parts: "The Charter of the Province of Pennsylvania and the City of Philadelphia, a Collection of all of the Laws now in Force and an Appendix," all known copies of the book having all three parts and bearing the date of 1742. In this condition it is a scarce book but hardly a rare one. The copy described in the list of W. J. Campbell of Philadelphia as unique contains the first part—the charters—with the imprint of 1741. It is this first edition of the charters that is so rare, only one other copy being recorded, and being unknown to Hildeburn and other bibliographers. The other copy of the charters is separate—not bound up as part of the complete book as afterwards issued with the 1742 edition of the charters, which had been reprinted to be bound up with the other two parts.

There seems to be a real need for a new edition of the writings of Robert Louis Stevenson, and Charles Scribner's Sons have united with the four English publishers who hold English copyrights in publishing an international edition to be known as the Vailima edition. It will be printed in this country, consist of 2,090 copies, 1,030 for America and 1,060 for England, and numbered and signed by Lloyd Osbourne. The set will consist of twenty-six volumes and will contain considerable material never published before in a collected edition. Each volume will contain a portrait and often a facsimile page selected to show the characteristics of Stevenson's handwriting at different stages of his literary career. There will be a new map of Treasure Island by Stevenson. Heretofore there have been five collected editions: the Edinburgh, Pentland and Swanston, published in England, and the Thistle and Biographical, printed here. The English editions were limited and all are selling at a premium. The American editions were unlimited. All are now practically out of print.

Collected Editions of Living Writers

AN editorial in the Literary Review on the subject of contemporary collected editions was reprinted in the PUBLISHERS' WEEKLY of July 9th. This caught the attention of the well-known publisher of George Moore's collected editions, T. Werner Laurie, and he submitted it to Mr. Moore for comment. Mr. Laurie's letter gives Mr. Moore's present feeling about collected works. Mr. Laurie writes:

Dear Sir:

"With reference to your somewhat caustic article which appeared recently referring to the way that authors were overdoing the Library Editions, I sent the issue containing it to Mr. George Moore, and I think you would be interested in the following extract from his reply:

"'As all my contemporaries are doing library editions my longing for one has passed, and that I feel it becomes one who has always stood aloof to be without one; I would go further and say that the practice of old time to leave only manuscripts for the future to collect and print appeals to me. Such is my humor today. The sale of my manuscripts would bring me enough money to live upon and the gratification of an escape from income tax. If it were not for you, Mr. Laurie, who would like, I presume, to continue the publication of limited editions, I should think that I should be moved to rely exclusively on my manuscripts, abjuring prints, and looking on library editions as anathema.'"

What's All The Shootin' For?

A lawyer: Yes, I read novels, but only mystery or adventure. I want entertainment, not sex or psychology.

A real estate man: I'm too tired when the day's over to tackle anything serious, but I can't find enough good mystery stories.

THE SHERIFF OF SILVER BOW

by Berton Braley

The Great West Limited has been held up and robbed of sixty thousand dollars. Sheriff Broderick is on the job. The trail is badly blurred at the start but quickly leads to Butte, Montana, and her abandoned copper mines, tunneling under the very heart of the city; to local politics, to men higher up, to a perfect network of clues and mysteries.

THE SHERIFF OF SILVER BOW

Claims to be a mystery story, plus adventure —good and plenty! It claims originality of setting, several new twists and turns, exciting situations, and unflagging interest. It claims nothing more. This is all that the lawyer and the real estate man want. Supply that want.
